 Task 1.

CEBDA / 10

1. C 2. E 3. B 4. D 5. A

Task 2.

1. What kinds of jobs are considered to be suitable only for human beings? +
2. When, according to Anthony Seldon, robots will be adopted for teaching? +
3. Which circumstances make teachers abandon their job? +
4. Why using robots could be a solution for the problem of the lack of teachers? +
5. How could robots make teachers' job easier? +

Task 3.

Ian Wright's article "Robot teachers?" written for "The News" is devoted to the subject of robots adapting for creative jobs such as teaching and medical practice, where humans are usually considered to be indispensable. He suggests that robots already can outperform doctors in making diagnosis, for example. As for teaching, Wright is concerned about the lack of teachers and admits that machines can't suffer from stress, exhaustion and other <sup>difficulties</sup> reasons making humans abandon their jobs. Nevertheless, the author thinks that robots are unlikely to share emotions with pupils. Hence, he eventually decides that it would be better to have non-teaching work (like checking homework) <sup>done</sup> made by machines. After getting rid of non-teaching duties, teachers will have more enthusiasm to deal with their main job.

In my estimation, robots would never replace humans in teaching, because they lack emotions and empathy. However, they could be useful for completing various simple tasks.

Task 4.

~~The Balloon the traveler.~~

Balloon the Traveler

I suddenly turned into a hot-air balloon flying in the cloudy sky. I didn't think about what had happened to me. I just carelessly travelled somewhere. I felt the mist gently touching my round body and the wind making me move further.

I couldn't say how long I have been flying. However, the wind was becoming stronger and stronger and I finally found myself making pirouettes in the air. I couldn't see anything and was absolutely confused. I didn't want it to continue.

I caught a giant oak by the branch in an attempt to stop. Fortunately, I managed to do it. I looked around and saw a gorgeous valley. I was taken aback by its breathtaking beauty. Decorated by thousands of flowers and ~~shined by~~ lighted by the sun, it was the most stunning place I've ever seen.

The oak's branches were big and strong, they protected me from the wind. I started to fall asleep. Nevertheless, I was woken up just a few minutes later. "Who are you and what are you doing here in my house?!" a little bird ~~or~~ was wondering. It was a pretty bird. ~~Her~~ <sup>Its</sup> ~~eyes~~ <sup>small</sup> black eyes were shiny, ~~her~~ <sup>its</sup> breast was red and there were some bl gray feathers in its tail. "I'm a balloon. I was flying in the sky ~~and~~ <sup>when</sup> the wind became too strong, ~~so~~ I had to stop somehow and used this branch to help me." I answered. The bird looked at me with ~~suspicious~~ <sup>suspicion</sup>. "I'm terribly sorry. I didn't have an intention to disturb you. Let me stay here ~~&~~ unless the wind gets less strong, I beg you! I don't have any shelter," I said. The bird thought for a minute and nodded. I was extremely grateful and happy.

I spent a lovely evening under the tree's crown. I made an acquaintance with ~~the~~ Kuku's (that was the bird's name) husband koko. Together we sang songs and chatted till the break of dawn. The couple told me a lot of exciting stories about their travels and I became eager to see everything they ~~saw~~ <sup>had seen</sup>.

The next morning the weather was wonderful and I decided to leave. ~~It was~~ <sup>It was</sup> so nice to meet you", koko <sup>had</sup> said to me before I flew away. ~~I~~ I was a bit reluctant to say "~~Good~~ <sup>Farewell</sup> bye" to my friends but I was thrilled by the fascinating travels that were ~~waiti~~ to happen.
