Task 2.

'What is the difference between speaking and communicating in real life and on stage? Does it exist?'

Communication has always been an integral part of our society, and there are even several types of it: for example, speaking in real life and while appearing on stage. In my opinion, there are certain differences between these two ways of communication.

Firstly, in everyday talks people use an ordinary, standard language style, but during participating in concerts or presentations they use more beautiful and complicated words. The reason is that performances on stage are often based on historic pieces or require using some terms, for instance. Secondly, talking with people in real life can be easier than appearing in theatres or halls and being seen by the audience. This is the reason why actors are often more concerned about their speech and emotions, than ordinary people. Also, it can be ~~totit~~ noticed that movements and words on stage have more meaning and sense than communication in reality as they are repeated for several times before a performance.

In conclusion, communicating in ordinary situations differs from speaking on stage. The reasons are subtext, a language style and speaker's state.

Task 3.

Brief introduction

The aim of this report is to reveal the results of a special survey that was devoted to the reasons for Bachelor and Master Degree students to study abroad. The given data illustrates both these population segments' motives and percents of <sup>the</sup> people who regard certain reasons as important.

Main features

The most obvious trend for both Bachelor and Master Degree students is future career prospects. The second place is for language learning: a quarter of the first group and 18 percents of the second.

Mucmobex 3

Then, the Bachelor degree students consider increased maturity and self-confidence to be one of the most important causes for education in another country. The second group do not agree: only one of twenty people thinks so.

Analysis and reasons

The reasons why language learning and future career prospects are popular trends with both groups are different. The first is that nowadays there are a lot of top universities in other countries, and if you study at them, your chances of having a good job are high. The second reason is that while being abroad, the first skill you should get is language knowledge, because you will have to communicate with locals.

Future predictions

I believe that better understanding of cultural values and biases will become a more popular reason to have education in another country. I think so because a globalisation process will widen and multiculturalism will flourish in the future. Also, ~~to my mind travelling opportunity could be a trend too, in the past as people will always like to see different places.~~

Conclusion

Yucmobuk 4

All in all, the results of the survey are satisfying. It is good enough that the main reasons to ~~have~~<sup>get</sup> education in another country for <sup>the students</sup> are language learning and career prospects.
