Nowadays Internet and other communicating technologies plays especially tremendous role in our life. We are able to access receive plenty of information about various people in social media. What if not the entire information you can see online, is truthful? I suggest Nevertheless, looking at it this subject or file concealing hiding everything behind it. First of all, it is unreasonable to click at each advertisement, since The criminals are capable of stealing all essential information, money, etc. Besides some people also lie, to take one example, in their social profiles, telling their unreal age or downloading confusing photographs and so on.

Moreover, it is no point believing every word in the Internet. The matter is that today everyone can post an article without even being well aware of what they are writing about. That's why some posts may contain some incorrect facts or just mistakes. What's more, it goes without saying people normally write messages online according to their own motives. Finally, All in all, the WWW World Wide Web might easily become a hazardous place for anyone who trusts anything. In order to avoid such a horrible case, we, should in my opinion, should behave carefully and deal with information thoroughly.

What's more, it goes without saying the vast majority of news may be gossips, so it is essential to use only official sources.

GLASGOW - Everyone is eager for achieving success or something great or even hitting the big time, especially currently. For that reason we decided to find out how to go a long way and interviewed some three people: a well-known runner Steve Smith, a renowned musician Ben Alexander Volkov and my gardener Paul Johns. They all have colorful interesting stories I'd like to write about. Steve was always really into running and one day once realised that sport suits him down to the ground. He was partook in host of different races and usually he would get some incredible prizes. "One day I participated in a major contest where sportsmen all around the world attended", told John. "I had been training especially much before this contest so I was extremely jubilant to win the first prize there". Since then Smith's life changed a lot and he turned into a professional runner.

GLASGOW- Everyone wants to achieve something great or even ^{hit the} big time, so I decided to find out more about it and interviewed a runner Steve Smith, a musician Alexander Volkov and a gardener Paul Johns.

Steve was always really into running and realised sport suits him down to the ground. He partook in host of races and usually got prizes. One day I participated in a major contest" told Smith "I was extremely jubilant and surprised to be the first to get through a red line". Since then Smith turned into a renowned runner.

Another breathtaking example is Alexander Volkov. He had a natural talent for music. Alexander was an A-student in his music school and trained his instrument all the time. Volkov he also performed in concerts showing amazing results. "Colourful Accuracies, a microphone, people applauding!"-remembered Alexander.

As for Johns, he has green fingers and does gardening as a hobby. In fact, he even led me to his garden and showed me his new sort of tomatoes. All those people appear to be suitable examples to everyone. Dear readers, do what you like, work hard and you'll achieve everything!
