Task 2.

The question whether communicating in reality is different from that on stage is highly debatable. Yet, if the dissimilarities exist, it is essential to explain them and make use of this knowledge in our life.

There is indeed a considerable difference between dialogues in drama and real-life communication; ~~for the~~ The flaws in translation of thoughts and feelings into verbal language are inevitable, and therefore the words you hear from another person ~~are~~ ^{give you} only a thumbnail sketch of his or her intentional message. That is why actors always face the challenge of unveiling the actual meaning behind the lines in order to feel their characters on a deeper level and understand their motivation. However, while having conversations in real life, people pay attention only to the final version of the message their partner is trying to convey and skip the "interpretation" part, which is frequently the root cause of confusion and misunderstanding.

By way of conclusion, trying to fully grasp the subtext of the information we receive from other people the way actors do in their job might be the key to effective and fruitful communication.

Task 3.

Why students choose to get education abroad

by Alex Grey
Moscow, Russia

The aim of this report is to discover and explain the top reasons motivating Bachelor Degree and Master Degree students to study abroad.

Judging by the results of a survey conducted between the students of a local university, the one overriding advantage of pursuing academic success ~~abroad~~ in a foreign country is the abundance of future career prospects, preferred by almost a half of Master Degree students and a third of Bachelor Degree students. The second most popular reason for studying abroad is language learning prospects, with a quarter of Bachelor Degree students choosing it as the defining one. A benefit equally popular with both groups (16%) is better understanding of cultural values and bias, whereas increased maturity and travelling opportunities are the options preferred mostly by Bachelor Degree or Master Degree students, respectively.

In light of the above, it is clearly evident that Master Degree students are more interested in building a successful career, improving cultural knowledge and travelling, as they are already mature enough and generally seek opportunities for personal growth and financial stability. Bachelor Degree students, however, still need to accustom to independent adult life and gain ground, which is why they are inclined to choose academic (instead of career) goals and building self-confidence first. Nevertheless, early maturity of children nowadays might suggest that in the nearest future Bachelor Degree students will combine study with work and pursue the same prospects Master Degree students do.

To conclude, the main advantages of studying in a foreign country as seen by the university students include increasing career opportunities, broadening one's horizons and improving one's
