Task 4.

The four-day workweek is currently getting a lot of recognition amongst different companies. However, as can be noticed in the provided texts, this topic is highly controversial.

Starting with the common traits of both texts, such key points about the four-day system as a productivity boost and the complexity of the process of implementing such schedule can be found in either of them. It's also commonly admitted that some types of businesses are almost incompatible with this system. Therefore it can be stated that even though the four-day workweek can be beneficial, it doesn't cancel all the organizational difficulties that follow it.

Concerning the differences between the texts, it should be mentioned that the first one mainly emphasizes the positive aspects of the four-day system, including health benefits, more balanced work-life correlation and higher dedication to ^{the} work. The second text, on the contrary, while still admitting the possible improvement of productivity, is highly critical of the system. The four-day workweek is said to cause extra stress and inconveniences for both employees and employers.

In my opinion, both of these texts should be taken into account by the ones who are interested into the topic of the four-day working system because they can serve as reflections of ~~pros~~ positive and negative sides.

To sum up, when forming an opinion about such a controversial topic it is vital to consider pros as much as cons, because such system has both ^{Универсальность} and they can alter for different businesses.

Task 5.

What If?..

I'm sure that many of those who are reading this post now have experienced losing social media access, be it because of a punishment from parents or some technical malfunction. But these are, in most cases, temporary things. Now imagine the access being lost by everyone in the world. No more doom-scrolling, procrastination and comparison to unachievable beauty standards... Sounds good, right? But let's be honest, most of us would face extreme discomfort if it actually happened. Social media platforms have altered the world too much to go back to the times without them.

Overconsumption VS Underconsumption

The main thing we use ~~for~~ social media for is certainly the widest information access the mankind could ever imagine. Personally, I think that social media platforms are currently vital for us ~~to~~ when it comes to being able to know what's even going on ~~in~~ in the world, even though it's quite easy to get overloaded by the amount of information. Another important topic for me, as an artist, is the possibility of consuming and sharing art in all its forms. Without social media there would probably be a major decrease of chances of artists to be noticed and promoted.

No More Chatting

Social ~~the~~ media being bad for communication is the opinion I disagree with the most. If all the platforms were about to disappear it would cause a lot of ~~harm~~ harm to personal connections between people: not everyone, including me, has a lot of opportunities to talk to their family, friends and loved ones eye-to-eye due to busy schedule after all.

I'd like to dedicate more ~~of~~ of my future posts to this topic, so I'll be extremely ~~happy~~ glad to here your opinions!
