30) C - "The challenge lies in finding the right balance between..." (Text 1)

"Success depends on ~~rethinking~~ rethinking workflow..." (Text 2)

Task 4.

The four-day workweek is becoming more and more popular nowadays. Experts argue if it is more beneficial or challenging for businesses. This has become the main topic of the two texts I have read.

Advocates of the four-day workweek, presented in the Text 1, state that this system improves employees' productivity and job satisfaction. Moreover, it helps to create a better work-life balance, since they get more free time. However, a four-day schedule has its own challenges. Some companies cannot implement such system easily due to constant availability they require. The key to developing the perfect schedule for both employers and employees is to find the ideal balance between productivity and reduced working hours.

According to the Text 2, the four-day workweek has both advantages and ~~disadvantages~~ downsides. Some industries, such as healthcare and customer support require to be staffed all the time, which makes it harder for them to adapt to this schedule. Moreover, some employees state that they feel more stressed than relieved due to the amount of work they have to do in fewer days. Also, it can be harder for teams to collaborate, when they have different schedules.

In my opinion, a four-day work week is beneficial for companies and their employees, when efficiency, reduced hours and work force capabilities are balanced correctly.

Task 5.

Is Social Media Didnt Exist: A World Reimagined.

Imagine waking up to a world, where social media no longer exists. No doomscrolling, no notifications pingging every few minutes, and no carefully edited post about friends' lives. While some might ~~take~~ ^{view} it a toss, others could argue whether it'd benefit our lives.

Communication Changes.

Without social media people would likely go back to traditional ways of communicating. Calls, face-to-face conversations, and even handwritten letters would make a comeback. People would be more engaged, sincere and true to life without the constant distraction of likes and shares. However, planning events or keeping in touch with long-distance friends would be harder without instant messaging, which could lead to loneliness.

Social Media Has Killed Romance.

Social Media has changed the way we interact drastically. It often depersonalizes our relationships; Instead of expressing feelings in person, while looking our partner in the eyes, we tend to send "I love you" texts. Nothing can compare to face-to-face chats: feeling the presence of your significant other and seeing their instant reactions. Social media has changed the way we interact forever, making it easier and more convenient to connect with people, but at what cost? It's hard to build a strong bond with your partner, when face-to-face conversation turned into texting, arguments into calls, and emotions became status updates. So, if social media didn't exist, people would enjoy in-person communication more, which would help them have a stronger bond with their partner.

What do you think would improve or decline without social media? What would change in your life? Share your ideas in the comments!
