Task 4.

The four-day workweek implementation has been ~~an~~ a topic of discussions. While some view this system as efficient, others think that it is challenging.

It may seem that there are no drawbacks for employees, as the four-day workweek ~~fulfills~~ ^{fulfilling} almost ~~wholly~~ completely fulfills the basic needs the traditional schedule doesn't: health, happiness.

~~and productivity~~. On one hand, the productivity ~~is~~ of the individual is increased because of this fulfillment. On the other hand, efficiency is the result of work done under pressure - employees have to do the same amount of work in a shorter period of time. ^{Some deem this a disadvantage.} I think that the condensed schedule is not the one to blame here: with right planning, ~~every~~ individual is likely to complete tasks without pressure even if ~~the~~ one workday is removed.

As for the bigger picture, the drawbacks, when it comes to businesses and industries, are more compelling. Although employees' motivation is increased, the proper functioning of a company cannot be guaranteed. Some industries that require 24-hour service would deteriorate if the condensed schedule is implemented. However, if the company is not attached to constant availability, reshaping the ~~process work~~ workweek may be truly efficient. ~~For example,~~ in this case, planning is what once again matters. It is important to consider that the needs of an employee align with those of a business.

All in all, the four-day workweek is efficient when implemented properly. ~~It does have perks~~ ~~when~~ with careful planning, such schedule does have perks for both employees and ~~in~~ companies.

Task 5.

"If Social Media didn't Exist".

Imagine that one day you ~~wake~~^{wake} up without any social media left to scroll through before getting up. ~~the~~ What would you do? Well, ^{let's say} you'd ~~get~~ get out of the house just in time. But what ~~about~~ about texting your friend about being ready to meet unusually early? ~~today~~ Is communication all screwed up now?

Good old oo's are back. ~~immediately is~~^{almost impossible} sending a text is ~~impossible~~, but also sharing global news seems... hard enough. There is no instant communication we are all used ~~to~~ to. However, something that we do have is technology, so there is still a chance to receive information, printed out, sent by email or uploaded on a website. The format is different, less stimulating, but I'm sure we can get used to it. The ~~problem~~^{that is} is ~~that~~ there is less freedom in connecting and ~~sharing your thoughts with others, something many of us need~~^{own}.

We should appreciate social media. The problem is that there is less freedom in connecting with others and sharing your own thoughts. Of course, without social media our attention span will increase, the FOMO will probably ~~be less~~ disappear. But, if we're honest, ~~social networks~~^{not having} such ~~of~~ customisable and free platforms to share jokes, art, knowledge or would be truly hard. We may still have websites and email, but they will never ~~replace~~^{give us} ~~compensate~~ the diversity and accessibility ~~social media~~^{that} ~~we~~ have. People may likely become less creative ~~as~~^{would} they know that ~~now~~ it takes ~~more~~ much effort to tell the world about themselves. ~~same~~^{more} goes with people being outgoing. With no ~~calls~~ videocalls and text messages, they may never get out of their shells.

Would life be hard to you if social media didn't exist? Can true human connections do
