Task 4.

The four-day workweek has been the subject of much recent debate as companies make changes in the working hours and employees share their opinion on the matter. The undeniable advantages and unfortunate downsides are discussed in the presented texts.

To start with, according to the first text, the four-day workweek boosts productivity and motivation. Besides, it positively affect the overall wellness of the workers. However, the second text illustrates the dissatisfaction of some employees, who feel rather overwhelmed to fulfill the same goals in fewer days. From my perspective, it's mentally easier to work harder and get an extra day off than to prolong your shift for a slower pace. Moreover, both texts discuss the global success of such approach, the necessity to reshape the companies' mindset and express concern about businesses requiring constant accessibility. While the first one highlights the importance ~~of business~~ of right planning, the second one focuses on the client-oriented industries and ~~essential~~ essential adjustments. I'd agree with both notions and firmly believe that the key to coveted efficiency could be the four-day workweek.

To summarize briefly, the reduced hours are beneficial if they align with employees' interests and companies' responsibilities.

Task 5.

"If social Media Didn't Exist"

Have you ever wondered how many days you can survive without the urge to scroll through social media? Seems like an easy deed, however, in our modern reality you would be deprived of instant news, communication with friends and entertainment. Therefore, I tried to imagine if reverting to no social media platforms is worth a shot.

Relationships

The first clear drawback would be the loss of international communication. Social media are a great opportunity to meet like-minded people, make friends, translate your hobbies and achievements and learn something new. Those in long distance relationship or with online friends would suffer. However, the absence of social media might make people appreciate their colleagues or neighbours more and stop the unhealthy comparison with others' success.

Information

Undoubtedly, sharing information would be much harder and slower. Despite ~~some~~ this inconvenience, it would also be impossible to spread misinformation and force people to do more research.

Daily life

Having checked my screen time recently, I was ~~horrified~~ horrified. Social media absorb our time by giving easy access to quick ~~stimuli~~ dopamine. We lose the ability to concentrate, form clip-thinking, ~~and~~ and develop the fear of missing out. So, in this case, the majority of people ~~would~~ would benefit from the absence of social platforms. It would be a challenge to get rid of such habit, however, we would dedicate more time to hobbies and family, live at a slower pace and learn patience.

Учёмовик

All in all, I reckon we would be happier, more attentive and thankful and less anxious if social media disappeared. Nevertheless, we would lose some meaningful connections. I am open for a debate, so feel free to express your own thoughts on this matter in the ~~same~~ comments!
