"ARIEL" OF THE FUTURE

In today's environmentally-concerned world the problem of clean and sustainable hydration is one of the pivotal issues. A board of aspiring high school students drawn to physics and ecology and committed to the sustainable development goals is willing to establish a futuristic startup that is sure to transform the system of global hydration. Our "Ariel" is capable of converting air... into water. No magic, pure science.

"Ariel" looks like a screen the size of a tablet with a bottle attached to it. The screen catches the particles of air, filters them, and then turns into clean, drinkable water. What makes the project unique is that it was created from scratch with the use of materials from an average school lab. The creation of a single unit is not costly at all, but mass production of "Ariel" surely needs funding.

If come to life, "Ariel" will be capable of resolving the greatest current environmental concern — the lack of drinkable water. Everyone, ~~anywh~~ everywhere can use "Ariel" to their advantage, but the customers we particularly aim at are definitely those living in dry, resourcefully-disadvantaged areas where water is hard to reach.

Although we start out as a national firm, we do hope to make ~~at~~ our startup a global company ensuring all regions of the planet have access to "Ariel" and, as a result, clean water and quality hydration. We are ready to cooperate with anyone who ~~is~~ can endorse "Ariel" publicly, but we are especially interested in collaborating with international organisations such as the UN that will let us contribute to the common cause of resolving the problem of water access.

~~"Ariel - not just a mermaid, but a savior. With her, everyone will always have the most precious resource - water."~~

"Ariel. Not a mermaid - a savior". With her, everyone in the whole world will always have the most precious resource - water.
